CANADA

Nurses maintain their competence in a variety of ways and continuing nursing education is one means of maintaining and increasing knowledge and skills. Two provinces have formal continuing competence programs for nurses. In British Columbia and Ontario, nurses assess their practice, determine needs, and follow through to obtain the experiences they require to develop knowledge skills or attitude.

Currently, none of the regulatory bodies in Canada have specific continuing education requirements for practising registered nurses. The regulatory bodies do not assess continuing education programs to assign C.E.U.s (continuing education units). Nurses in Canada do keep records of participation in continuing education for purposes of maintaining specialty certification and in British Columbia and Ontario for continuing competence programs. In most provinces and territories, nurses who have not practised for a specified number of hours within a specified time limit must take a refresher course before being given permission to return to work in nursing.

Canadian nurses are accountable for providing competent nursing care to their clients. The Canadian Nurses Association (CNA) believes that to provide competent nursing care, a registered nurse must maintain and continuously enhance the knowledge, skills, attitude and judgment required to meet client needs in an evolving health care system. They also strongly support the need for all practicing nurses to become competent and knowledgeable in all aspects of nursing informatics. Read the CNA publication, What is Nursing Informatics and Why is it so Important? These courses are written by a Canadian with the entire global nursing arena in mind.

WORLD WIDE

World Health Organization (WHO) - "In order to provide the best patient care health professionals should invest in educational opportunities that give them up to date knowledge and skills. We aim to support an educated and informed health workforce to provide the best health services to populations worldwide and to achieve the best possible health for all."

EUROPE - "Life long learning is now seen as an obligation of all health professionals. This life long learning is called Continuing Professional Development (CPD)."

"Continuing Professional Development (CPD) is the systematic maintenance, improvement and continuous acquisition and/or reinforcement of lifelong knowledge and skills of health professionals. It is pivotal to meeting the patient needs, health service delivery needs and the learning needs of individual professionals. The term continuing professional development acknowledges not only the wide ranging competences needed to practise high quality care delivery but also the multi-disciplinary context of patient care."

"Civil Society is committed, through their members, to support activities to promote and ensure that CPD is widely accepted and recorded by all professionals within the health system of the European Union. Demonstrating professional commitment, participation in structured, recorded and evaluated CPD will provide for flexible career choices, enhance career satisfaction and improve patient care.

Therefore:

The Health Professionals should:

- ◆ Ensure competency in each health service provided by continually updating knowledge and skills; and,
- ◆ Accept personal responsibility for maintaining and assessing their own competence throughout their professional working lives."
